About This Book

This short collection began inside Almuallim's own classrooms — a handful of du'as our teachers noticed came up again and again in lessons with young children.

Rather than compiling from memory, every du'a here was checked directly against the primary hadith collections and the Noble Qur'an itself. Where scholars have differed on a hadith's authenticity, we've noted that too, rather than smoothing it over — because a book that teaches children about honesty should itself be honest.

Our hope is small but sincere: that these ten du'as become part of the daily rhythm of your household, exactly as they were part of the daily rhythm of the Prophet's (peace be upon him) own life.

How We Verified Each Du'a

- 1 Cross-checked the Arabic text against at least two independent hadith collections, or the Uthmani Mushaf for Qur'anic du'as.
- 2 Recorded the narrating companion (Ṣaḥābī) for every hadith-based du'a, wherever authentically established.
- 3 Noted the authenticity grading — Ṣaḥīḥ or Ḥasan — as classified by classical and contemporary scholars of hadith.
- 4 Reviewed the final transliteration and translation for classroom accuracy with our teaching team before publishing.

Prepared with care,

Assalamu Alaikum, dear parent

"Teach your children three things: love of your Prophet, love of his family, and recitation of the Qur'an."

Every one of us hopes to raise a child who feels close to Allah — not out of fear, but out of love and habit. One of the simplest, most beautiful ways to build that closeness is through the small du'as the Prophet (peace be upon him) taught for everyday moments: waking up, eating, leaving the house, going to sleep.

These aren't long or difficult. A young child can learn most of them within a single week. But said sincerely and consistently, they quietly shape a child's entire relationship with Allah — turning ordinary moments of the day into small acts of worship.

We've gathered ten of the most authentic, well-loved du'as into this short guide — each with the Arabic text, an easy transliteration, the English meaning, and its authentic reference — so you can read and practise them together as a family.

How To Use This Guide

- 1 Say it at the real moment. Read the relevant du'a out loud together right when it applies — at the breakfast table, by the front door, at bedtime.
- 2 One du'a at a time. Let your child master one before moving to the next. Little and often beats a lot all at once.
- 3 Explain the meaning simply. Children remember what they understand. A one-line explanation in your own words goes a long way.

"Be mindful of Allah and He will protect you. Be mindful of Allah and you will find Him in front of you."

4 Habits That Help Du'as Stick

1

Little and Consistent, Not Long and Rare

Five minutes daily beats one long session a week. Recite a du'a together at its natural moment — the same door, the same table, the same pillow — so the words attach themselves to a habit your child already repeats every day.

2

Say It Out Loud, Together, Every Time

Children learn Islamic manners by copying, not by being told. If you say "Bismillah" before your own meal and "Allahummaf-tah lee abwaba rahmatik" as you walk into the masjid, your child will start saying it before you even ask them to.

3

Celebrate the Effort, Not Just Perfect Pronunciation

A three-year-old mispronouncing "Alhamdulillah" is still doing something beautiful. Praise the attempt warmly, gently correct the pronunciation over time, and let their confidence grow before their accuracy does — accuracy comes with a patient, qualified teacher.

4

Let Them Teach It Back to You

Ask your child to "teach" the du'a to a sibling, a toy, or even to you. Explaining something out loud is one of the fastest ways a young mind turns new words into a lasting memory.

"Every one of you is a shepherd, and every shepherd is responsible for his flock."

— ṢAḤĪḤ AL-BUKHĀRĪ 893

May Allah make our children the coolness of our eyes.

Ameen.

A Closing Note

Ten du'as, said sincerely and often, can quietly reshape a childhood. They will not make your child perfect, and they are not meant to — but they plant a habit of turning to Allah in every ordinary moment, which is, in itself, a kind of perfection.

If your child learns even three of these ten this year, you will have given them something that stays long after this booklet is folded away in a drawer.

We ask Allah to accept this small effort, to bless your home, and to make your children a means of guidance and comfort for you — in this world, and in the next.

"When a person dies, his deeds come to an end, except for three: ongoing charity, beneficial knowledge, or a righteous child who prays for him."

— SAHĪH MUSLIM 1631

Jazakumullahu Khayran for reading this with your child.
